Art is the delicious evidence that I'm unabashedly self-indulgent. I embrace the hell out of art, as it is the air I breathe to stay alive. Not only does my own art serve only me in what feels like a primitive, innate way - I cannot devour enough from our deeply enriched community. I've become more inspired and affected by outside sources, such as classes, fellow artists, the natural world and the all-knowing-internets. While I celebrate sharing the common and passionate thread between artists, I also possessively maintain my unique characteristics: my patchwork education and tangled sense of humor. I strongly believe that art is a basic necessity for human survival and without it, our brains, civilization and existence would lose a quality of depth, richness and meaning.
